We are in receipt of your request for Detroit Diesel Allison to state our position on use of your fuel conditioner in our engines, and the effect it may have on warranty consideration.

Detroit Diesel Allison does not recommend fuel conditioners. With the use of a good quality fuel and proper engine operation, there is no need for auxiliary support items. These products are so many and diverse that testing and qualifying the product is the responsibility of the organization marketing the product.

The use of a fuel conditioner will not invalidate DDA warranty; however, we could not be responsible for failure of engine components directly caused by use of the conditioner not supplied by us. We would continue to cover defects in material and workmanship caused by us on our products.

I trust this answers your inquiry.

Sincerely,

E. J. Schlaff
Manager, Technical Service
